SSA YEG Educational Talk & Networking Session:

BLOCKCHAIN TECHNOLOGY FOR SHIPPING

How will new technologies alter the risk profile of shipping?

New technologies are being employed to manage risk in commodities trading, a number of which will impact on shipowners. Smart contracts operating over distributed ledger technology, and other advances, such as Artificial Intelligence and data analytics could have a number of impacts, including bring an end to the paper trail the shipping industry has relied upon for centuries. This presentation will consider the risks facing the market, and how the use of technology may mitigate them.

Speakers' Profile

Ms Stella Cramer, Partner, Singapore, Norton Rose Fulbright (Asia) LLP

Stella is a technology and innovation lawyer based in Singapore, and is the Co-Head of the technology and innovation practice for Asia and Head of Risk Advisory for Asia. She regularly advises on complex, transformational technology and commercial transactions, outsourcings, related regulatory issues and global compliance programmes for global financial institutions and major corporates across all industry sectors in the region. She also has extensive experience in the management of blockchain transactions and how “smart contracts” may be used to implement terms and conditions of any agreement between the parties.

Mr Daniel Perera, Of Counsel, Norton Rose Fulbright (Asia) LLP

Dan is a senior dispute resolution practitioner based in Norton Rose Fulbright’s Singapore office, focussing on disputes within the shipping and international trade sector. Dan has particular industry experience within the fields of dry shipping (particularly charterparty claims at arbitration and mediation) and shipbuilding (contract negotiation and disputes). With the industry knowledge, Dan will be able to share his views on how the shipping industry can take advantage of the blockchain technologies.
