With economic growth seemingly global and sustainable, better fundamentals on vessel supply and more prudent lending practices by banks and finance providers, the outlook for shipping is better in 2018 than for many a year. That said, new regulations will seriously affect the industry and there is no definitive solution yet, imminent interest rate hikes will prove costly and geopolitics remain as fragile as ever. For once, industry fundamentals are almost taking second place to external factors driving investment decisions and strategy. Not only this but with new technologies taking more and more interest in shipping efficiencies and even the finance mechanism of shipping, much change is afoot and industry participants must not only be aware but knowledgeable about options available. Risk and challenge is the name of the game in shipping and there is plenty opportunity for intelligent players to decipher the data and manoeuvre through the available sources of finance from New York to Shanghai to Singapore and position for the future.

The event has eligibility for the Maritime Cluster Fund (MCF) training grant.
